Please register your interest for joining UNICEF, Save the Children, the US Department of State and Bureau of Humanitarian Affairs (BHA), and the UK Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCDO) in an online discussion on the role of early recovery in the humanitarian education sector in Syria today.

The Syria response is at a critical juncture following the deadly earthquakes, which has renewed attention to the importance of early recovery initiatives. The panel will discuss the difficult questions of how best to invest diminishing financial resources into the most effective education system, to foster an environment that is inclusive and resilient; one that meets children's needs and aspirations in the short- and medium-term, and can build towards a long-term vision.
